Digispec, a leading manufacturer of mouse pads, is committed to providing customers with products that are safe to use and compliant with appropriate laws and regulations.

In order to ensure compliance, samples of finished products are sent to third-party testing facilities on a bi-annual basis and use only CPSC approved laboratories. While our mouse pads are not intended for children, mouse pads adorned with children's decor may be considered "children's products". Therefore, our products are subject to the rigorous requirements of California Proposition 65 and relevant testing for children's products. The suite of testing that our products are subjected to includes testing for phthalates, lead, cadmium, and flammability of solids. Our products are also tested for compliance with the requirements of Toxics in Packaging. As a result of the testing for the aforementioned items, we believe that we are compliant with California Proposition 65 and that none of our products warrant special labeling in order to comply with California Proposition 65.

As an additional check, every item that we manufacture is inspected before shipping for safety and quality purposes.

Finally, we are socially responsible with respect to our employment practices. We submit to periodic social compliance assessments to evaluate our employment and payroll documentation, facility policies and procedures, compliance to environmental regulations, and health and safety practices. Our recent assessment was performed to the broadly-accepted Sedex Members Ethical Trade Audit (SMETA) requirements, and that report is available on our website.

Please feel free to contact us with any additional questions regarding product safety or quality. Thank you.

Thank you,

Sherri Hall
